

Search

More Search Options

Browse Great Britain

Great Britain

Browse Related Subjects

- Politics > International Studies > International Security & Strategic Studies

Subjects > Politics > Comparative Politics > Great Britain

Nuclear Weapons and British Strategic Planning, 1955-1958

MARTIN S. NAVIAS

0198277547, hardback, 280 pages

1991 In Stock

Price: $115.00 (04)

S&H: $5.00 (US) $10.00 (INTL)

Never Mi
Free Email

Your Em

More Oxfor

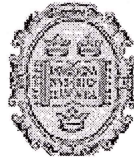

Enter Sale

Promo C

Series | Reviews | Product Details | About the Author\(s\)

Learn more about this title...

Browse More Titles In International Security & Strategic Studies

Ambiguity and Deterrence
John Baylis

Price: $125.00

Browse More Titles In Irish

Ernie O'Malley
Richard English

Price: $32.00

Browse More Titles In International Security & Strategic Studies

Rethinking Confidence-Building Measures
Marie-France Desjardins

Price: $29.95

Series and Imprint Information

- Nuclear History Program

Description

During the 1950s nuclear weapons began to play an increasingly important defense policy. The development of thermonuclear bombs and assessments of destruction that would result from an exchange of nuclear warheads helped plan for war, and influenced the structure and deployment of her arms study, Martin Navias seeks to analyze the significance of the 1957 White Paper in the context of British strategic planning during the mid-1950s. He assesses the White Paper as a culmination of trends already prevalent in British strategic planning, discusses whether the basis for a truly independent deterrent was during 1955-56, and identifies continuities in strategic policies. Nuclear Weapons and British Strategic Planning 1955-1958 will be an invaluable work of reference on the development of post-war British defense policy.

Reviews

"Navias's book is a fascinating study of the formulation of the 1957 White Paper of postwar British military policy and nuclear history will find much value in it. Through its rich detail and extensive employment of original government documents, the book contributes to our understanding of a number of important themes, a