

Simple protest over nuclear war games

NUCLEAR war games are going on near Glamis yet virtually no-one realises the true meaning of these actions.

The U.K. Warning and Monitoring Organisation ran its nuclear war exercises at R.O.C. bunkers all over the country on Sunday.

At one such bunker near Glamis, members of Blairgowrie and District C.N.D. and their families gathered at a family peace picnic, a simple protest designed at attracting attention to their activities.

By increasing public awareness in the exercises, the C.N.D. movement hope to prove that preparing for nuclear war is unwise.

Spokesperson Kristin Barrett said, "The exercises are carried out three times a year at 217 R.O.C. bunkers scattered throughout Scotland.

"In addition to Glamis, there are bunkers at Clova, Strathguthrie and Letham, as well as at Edzell, Inverkeilor and Alyth. Does that make you feel safe?

"As tax-payers, everyone is entitled to know more about these nuclear war exercises being carried out in your own neighbourhood."

She encouraged concerned people to go along to their nearest bunker and ask the R.O.C. volunteers who look after them on behalf of the Warning and Monitoring Organisation what's going on.

"We feel it is nonsense to be practising what should happen if there was ever a nuclear war. It's a situation people might start thinking about," continued Kristin.

"The only nuclear situation worth practising would be in the event of a civil nuclear accident. Nobody would have any qualms about that."

C.N.D. members presented R.O.C. volunteers with their suggestions for a "nuclear winter kit."

It contained items such as a fur coat, a bottle of water, jar of fresh air, drawing of the sun and sun tan lotion, record of "The Show is Over", picture of the earth, a Santa mask, and C.N.D. balloon.

■ Our photograph shows the peaceful protesters at the bunker near Glamis, pictured with their kit for a nuclear winter.